Today I'm really happy to be able to bring you an interview with a young, environmentally aware photographer, Brian Doyle. During our hour long conversation Brian shares his story with us and talks about his photography and how he's using it to hopefully secure a better planet for his and future generations. As our conversation was not scripted I don't have a manuscript too hare with you today, but as a reference, here are the bullet points that I put together to guide our discussion. This eBook is just to share Brian's images with you in high resolution.

Here are the bullet points that we used for our conversation.

- Tell us a little about yourself and how you initially go into photography?
- It's great that you are raising awareness of environmental issues with your photography. Tell us more about what you are doing
- You've sent me five beautiful images. Please walk us through each image
- With obviously a strong foothold in the genre of wildlife photography, can you give us three tips for people that want to shoot better wildlife images?
